Israel 'concerned' over call to Arabs to use oil weapon

TEL AVIV, April 9 (Agencies) - Divergent views by Egypt and Israel of their peace treaty surfaced Monday in the first open dispute on the meaning of the document since it was signed two weeks ago, as Egypt's parliament began debating the accord.

Israeli officials said Prime Minister Menahem Begin may inaugurate the newly installed "hot line" between Tel Aviv and Cairo to clarify the issues with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.

Press reports quoted Egyptian Prime Minister, Mustapha Khalil as saying Egypt would consider Syrian military action to free the Golan Heights from Israeli occupatioo as a defensive war and would feel free to throw its forces into battle.

Khalil also reportedly told the Egyptian parliament during a debate oo the treaty's ratification that the Arab world should use its oil weapon oo the West to pressure Israel into concessions on the Palestinian issue, due to be discussed over the next year.

An Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman, replying to questions, said Khalil's remarks cootradicted the spirit of the treaty and" some specific paragraphs.

"Obviously, this creates con-cern in Israel," said spokesman Micbael Shiloh, refusing to be drawn into a specific response to Khalil." Israel will take the pobtical and diplomatic steps required," he said.

Disagreement over Egypt's earlier defense commitments to the Arab states was one of the issues that delayed the signing of the treaty for six mooths. Israel claimed the treaty's ban on future bostilities superceded Egypt's previous obligations.

The disagreement was resolved with a vaguely worded formula that allowed both countries to sign the docomeot without conceding their interpretations.

If the treaty passes through the Egyptian national assembly, as expected, the two countries plan to exchange documents of ratifica-tion next Monday at a U.S. early warning base in the Sinai Peninsula in a neutral zooe now separating the two armies. The ceremony will officially put the treaty into

Meanwhile, Somoza and a daughter left on his private plane for a scheduled vacation in the United States. They flew first to Topeka, Kansas, where Somoza's younger son Julio is a senior at Washburn University. They spent the night in Topeka and were expected to fly Monday to Miami.

Somoza has been at odds with the U.S. government since late last year, when be rejected a national referendum on his rule proposed by mediators from America, Guatemala and the dominican Republic in a bid to bring peace to his nation.

In February, the Carter administration retaliated by cutting back economic aid to Nicaragua. While it stopped short of cutting diplomatic relations, the State Department said its embassy staff would be halved and no new assistance considered until Somoza permitted internationallysupervised elections.

Somoza is the son of the late General Anastasio Somoza Garcia, who dominated the country from 1937 untill his assassination in 1956. Then his two sons took over and either occupied the presidency or ruled through trusted associates. The elder son, Luis Somoza, died in 1967,

Almost 20 years after Belgium granted Zaire its independence, the two countries" are condemned to listen to one another because of the ties that unite them."

Mobutu made his remarks at the end of a three-day visit in which he held talks with governcold shutdown, a job that ment and business leaders seeking economic aid. He has visited other West European countries in recent weeks, as well as Saudi Arabia.

He gave no details of his talks. Answering a question about critical food shortages in his comtry, Mobutu said this was true for the cities alone but abundant food is available elsewhere. He blamed food shortages largely on the population boom, Saying in 1960, when Zaire became independent, the population of Kinshasa was 450,000. It has since ballooned to three million.

Mobuto, said he governs with the support of the population. "There is oo opposition in Zaire," he said, dismissing critics as "vagabonds" and inviting anyone to cite "one single example of corruption" in his government,

Mitterrand base undermined after Socialist neeting

MEIZ, France, April 9 (R) — The fragile unity of the French Socialist Party was shattered at its national congress over the weekend, but the party managed to avoid an open challenge to the leadership of veteran campaigner Francois Mitterrand.

In a final delegates' vote Mitterrand's text won 47 per cent, and Michel Rocard's, his challenger had 21 per cent. The motion of Rocard's ally, Pierre Mauroy, took 17 per cent and that of the Socialist left wing 15 per cent.

Mitterrand, 62, thus has only minority backing in his own party as the Socialists prepare to fight the first direct elections for the Common Market's European Parliament in June.

- Rocard, 48, regarded as a potential successor to Mitterrand, said that rival factions had given up trying to patch up policy differences after negotiations which dragged on into Sunday night.

Addressing the closing session of the Congress, Rocard said that he and his supporters now considered themselves an opposition within the Socialist movement.

But he did not stake a claim for the party leadership or try to go over Minterrand's head to seek the Socialist nomination to run against Valery Giscard d'Estaing for the presidency in 1981.

Turning to Mitterrand, 62, on the platform, he said: "Mine will not be the opposition of a pretender. It is for you to say whether you will be a candidate in the presidential election, and if so I shall not stand against you."

Rocard, who is apparently counting on the support of Mauroy, deputy leader of the party and mayor of Lille, tried and failed this weekend to have his ideas on party policy, and particu-larly on relations with the Communists, incorporated in a declaration acceptable to all factions. He said he was profoundly sad that this had not been possible. Rocard has been questioning the party strategy of close partnership with the Communists against the center-right coalition that has ruled France for 20 years.

He believes the lesson of the left's shattering defeat in general elections a year ago after a bitter quarrel between the two left-wing parties is that the Socialists must be more independent of the Communists.

Rocard defended himself against charges that he was betraving the basic Socialist line set down when the party took on its present form in 1971.

He said, "At that time it was impossible to predict what would happen — the determination of the Communists to break with us, the economic crisis, the huge rise in unemployment, or the upsurge of international perils."

Rocard, a Socialist intellectual of Protestant middlecalss origins, is a strong opponent of rigid Marxist economic doctrine. He prefers a free market economy, with worker participation in management, to exercise central planning and sweeping nationalization.

The Socialist Party assembled for its Metz congress buoyed by successes in local elections last month, which gave it 27 per cent of the poll, more than any other political group.

Before the Congress started, party branches voted on policy motions by Mitterrand and five other leading party figures. Mitterrand's was the most popular with 40 per cent of the vote.

Rocard asserted that from now on the Socialist Party would be run by a sizeable minority. "This has been a difficult congress, but at least nobody has spoken of leaving the party or of a split. Our future is together," he said.

The pro-Socialist daily "Le Matin" commented Sunday, "The party's credibility, its ability to govern France one day . . . depend on overcoming these commotions

Vance sees Dobrynin

SALT talks continue in U.S.

WASHINGTON, April 9 (AP) Soviet Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin, who says his country and the United States are " very close" to a strategic arms limitation treaty, will discuss the proposed pact with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance Monday.

It will be their second meeting in three days. On Saturday, Dobrynin delivered the Russians' response to American proposals on the two issues still outstanding.

While neither would disclose the substance of their 40-minute session, the Soviet ambassador said the two sides were " closer and closer. Very close.

Military reported swallowing bulk of American tax dollars

WASHINGTON, April 9 (AP) - Some 65 per cent of the federal income taxes that the average American family paid in the 1960s and through much of the 1970s went for militaryrelated expenditures, a Michigan research group says.

The study released Sunday by Employment Research Associates of Lansing, Michigan, also shows, however, that the percentage has been declining steadily, from 68 per cent during the Vietnam War to 50 per cent in 1976, the last year analyzed. The new study differs greatly from government analyses of military spending arriving at its result by altering the traditional definitions of both military expenditures and tax payments.

The group says that, in addition to the Pentagon budget, veterans' pensions and most of the interest on the national debt should legitimately be considered military expenditures.

Also, the group says, federal expenditures for such matters as social security and highway construction are excluded from total government spending because they are paid for by government trust funds rather than directly from tax income.

Marion Anderson, director nf the Michigan group, said the unusual calculations were made because the government's figures have "consistently understated the true cost of the military to the hard-pressed taxpayer."

According to her group's figures, the American family of four with average income, filing a joint return and claiming standard deductions, paid $19,450 in taxes from 1960 through 1976.

Of that, she said, more than $12,000 went for spending by the Defense Department and on veterans benefits and national debt payments — a total the group calls the "Pentagon tax."

That means that 65 cents of every tax dollar paid by such a family during those years went to military expenditures. The same would be true for each corporate tax dollar, Mrs, Anderson said.

Government figures, by contrast, indicate last year's defense budget of $105.2 billion represented 23 per cent of the total U.S. budget, or $483 per person compared with total government spending of $2,069 per person.

Several economists were asked to comment on the Michigan group's results, but declined, saying they could not properly evaluate them without reviewing the entire statistical process. But Mrs. Anderson argued that, "this is a more accurate reflection of what

Two leagues

By Nicolas Tatro

Egypt has decided to maintain its own version of the Arab League in Cairo that will rival a Tunis-based organization planned by Arab opponents of the separate peace treaty it concluded with Israel. Egypt's strategy in maintaining its own Cairo-based organization appears to have a two-fold purpose:

— To hinder formation of a new headquarters by denying Arab opponents the manpower, money and records to run the organization smoothly.

- To maintain a framework to attract Arab states who may later endorse its strategy.

In addressing parliament on Saturday Prime Minister Mustapha Khalil said Egyptian banks had been instructed not to pay checks signed by Arab League officials appointed after the Baghdad meeting.

This move will effectively tie up$ 20 million in operating expenses for the League secretariat and much of the $ 70 million budgeted for various economic, social and educational agencies.

The Cairo secretariat also maintains League records dating back to 1945 when the organization was formed and based in the Egyptian capital. Unconfirmed reports have suggested these records have already been improunded

But Egypt sees its most effective lever is manpower. Egyptians make up an estimated 70 per cent of the 600 bureaucrats and technicians who keep the League headquarters operating on a day-to-day basis. Egyptians also dominate the 300 employees in the 22 specialized agencies, 15 of which are based in the Egyptian capital. Of 20 Arab League offices in Europe, the United States and Africa, Egyptian staff account for more than half of the employees.

On the other hand, it will be difficult for Egypt to maintain an effective organization of its own with the firm backing of only Oman and Sudan, which did not attend the Baghdad summit.

and Sudan, which did not attend the Baghdad summit.

Egyptian officials, however, maintain that divisions in the Arab world have frequently occurred but rarely have lasted long.

"Ninety-five per cent of the resolutions ever taken by the League have not been implemented," said one Egyptian official.

Egypt appears to be banking on picking up the support of Somalia, North Yemen, Morocco and other moderates.

"They will return again because our interests and aims are the same. I am sure of it," an Egyptian official predicted, and said history appears to favor Egypt's point of view.

In 1961, the League met in Shtaura, Lebanon, after a major crisis erupted over Syria's withdrawal from a union with Egypt. An angry President Gamal Abdul Nasser of Egypt called for dissolution of the old league and formation of a new "league of Arab peoples." Three years later the feud was patched up and plans for a rival group forgotten.

Egypt's justification for maintaining Cairo as the headquarters of the League is based on its contention that the Baghdad meeting was "illegal" since it was called by the government of Iraq rather than the secretary general of the League.

But the creation of a new headquarters in Tunis seems likely although Egyptian officials say it may be difficult to accomplish with only the 5 million allocated by the Baghdad summit. (AP)

Bhutto's threat

By Peter Niesewand
ISLAMABAD -

The body of Pakistan's deposed Premier Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, gaunt from his 18 month ordeal, his neck snapped, the flesh bruised — now lies in the family grave in the hamlet of Ghari Bhutto, near the town of Larkana.

From this remote walled cemetery, Bhutto may pose a greater threat to the military ruler, Gen. Zia UL-Haq, than he ever did in life.

As he stood on the scaffold at 2 a.m., and the hangman strapped his legs tightly together, Bhutto cried out: "Oh Lord help me, for I am innocent."

The reaction of Pakistanis to the furtive, dead-of-night execution has been stunned, and angry. Employees in government offices wept openly. An elderly woman snapped: "This is the most disgraceful day in Pakistan's history." In Lahore, a crowd stoned cars, and set some alight. In Rawalpindi, youths hurled rocks at a bus. A man warned: "Now this country will be like Iran."

More than a thousand women defied martial law regulations which ban political activity and make it an offense to bring into disrepute members of the armed forces.

They shouted anti-Zia slogans, wept and beat their chests in Rawalpindi's Liaghat Park. The venue was significant. It was here that Bhutto began the movement which brought down Gen. Ayub Khan's and Yahya's government ten years ago.

Abdul Hafeez Pirzada, Bhutto's former finance minister, arrived at the park and was carried shoulder high by the crowd. They waved People's Party flags, and shouted: "Revenge, revenge, revenge." Some women tore their clothes and taunted the police: "Shame on you, you couldn't save him."

Police carrying Lathis (cane sticks, often metal tipped) repeatedly charged the demonstrators and an unknown number of arrests were made.

Prayer meetings were held all over Pakistan. The military regime has ordered that news of these be censored from newspapers here, and has also banned mention of details of Bhutto's burial.

Foreign embassies have been saddened and worried about the implications the execution will have for Pakistan. Ambassadors held a regular monthly meeting Wednesday night, and Bhutto's execution dominated proceedings. The Swedish embassy closed its doors in disgust Wednesday morning, and pulled in its flag.

Most interesting of all will be the reaction of the armed forces. There were known to be divisions on the question of hanging Bhutto — both on the issue of whether he was really guilty of conspiring to murder a political opponent, and over the wisdom of killing him, even if he was. Now Gen. Zia has cast the die, and the military must face the consequences.

Mumtaz Ali Bhutto, a leading lieutenant in the onceruling Pakistan People's Party and the dead premier's cousin, commented: "Bhutto is dead, but the problem for them has been magnified a million-fold. Let see how they deal with it now."

The hanging of Bhutto was an affair more squalid than executions usually are. The former prime minister, who has been kept in filthy conditions for the last eleven days, was denied his final meal from friends outside. Officials refused to take it in.

Close relatives were called to meet him Tuesday, not knowing for certain whether it was to be the final visit, but when they arrived, gaol officials turned them away. One of them, Mumtaz Bhutto had been invited by the superintendent to come at 3.30, and when he did he was told by guards that he did not have an interview.

Wednesday he said: "The whole thing was a callous and cruel joke. I was deprived not only of the opportunity of seeing him, but also of getting his final instructions of what to do."

The military regime was determined to keep the hanging secret, and they abandoned prison regulations to do it. Only Bhutto himself, and the two family members who were under house arrest—second wife, Nusrat, and his daughter Benazir, 25—knew that the execution would take place at 2 a.m. instead of the usual hour of dawn. Security around Nusrat and Benazir was strengthened, so no word could leak out of the military operation.

While Bhutto was being taken from his stinging, antinfested death cell for a last bath, and was being given verses from the Koran to read, a senior spokesman for Gen. Zia was at dinner assuring correspondents that there was no possibility of an execution the following day, and that the military ruler was still considering elemency.

Bhatto was writing out his will when, just after midnight, armed troops took up positions around the gaol. Two Pakistani journalists who were seen watching the activity were arrested and held in a nearby gaol. They were released at days.

Bhutto signed his will in the presence of the magistrate who would shortly watch him die. Then, with his arms tied behind his back, he was taken in slow procession to the scaffold. Witnesses said his six escorts moved with their eyes downcast.

Bhutto's body, the head hooded, dangled from the noose for thirty minutes before the hangman cut him down, and he was laid out in a simple coffin. An army truck waited in the yard to carry it to the nearby Chaklala air force base, adjoining Islamabad International Airport. Just before 4 a.m., a military aircraft took off for the town of Sukkur in the province of Sind, and another truck drove the coffin to Bhutto's birthplace.

Here, according to the official statement, the body was handed over to his "near relatives." Bhutto's first wife, the Amir Begum, was told that he had been hanged. Two uncles were also informed. — (G)

It's never too late to mend

By Michael Adams

In all the excitement over the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace agreement, too little attention was paid to an important resolution which was adopted by the Security Council of the United Nations a few days earlier. And this was a pity, because the resolution had a bearing on the Egyptian-Israeli agreement, especially that part which relates to the future of the West Bank.

The resolution dealt with the vexed question of the Israeli settlements in the occupied territories (including Jerusalem). It rolled that:

It ruled that:

"The policy and practices of Israel in establishing settlements in the Palestinian and other Arab territories occupied since 1967 have no legal validity and constitute a serious obstruction to achieving a comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East."

Now the hostility which the overwhelming majority of the Arabs have shown towards the Egyptian-Israeli agreement has been due to their mistrust of the objective towards which President Sadat and Menahem Begin seem to be working. The Arabs do not believe that the final result will be a comprehensive settlement which provides for Palestinian selfdetermination. President Carter, in sponsoring and promoting the agreement, was emphatic in saying that he regarded it as the first step towards such a comprehensive settlement. President Sadat too has said that this is his objective and his prime minister called the agreement "a triumph for Egypt and for the Palestinians." Begin has been more cautious, but he told the Knesset when it was debating the agreement with Egypt that "We (the Israelis) want to show fairness, mutual respect to our Arab neighbors in Eretz Israel." At the time he made it very plain that "fairness" and "mutual respect" did not mean that Israel would agree to Palestinian self-determination - or even that the Israelis would withdraw their forces from the West Bank, which Begin insists on calling "Judea and Samaria.'

So there are very real doubts about the final conclusion to which this Egyptian-Israeli agreement is supposed to lead. And that, of course, is why the other Arabs mistrust and oppose it. Unless they can be persuaded that all the parties to the agreement sincerely see it as the first step to an overall settlement involving an Israeli withdrawal from all the occupied territories, they will continue to mistrust it, whatever arguments President Carter uses to try to win them over.

This is where the question of the Israeli settlements comes in. So long as the Israelis continue to build settlements and to plan the establishment of new ones, it is obvious that they do not intend to withdraw; on the contrary, it is plain from the energy and the material resources which the Israeli government is putting into the settlement program (which has been accelerated even during the period since Carter first brought the Egyptian and Israeli leaders together at Camp David) that Israel's intention is to strengthen its hold on the West Bank so that, by the end of the "transitional period" envisaged in the treaty with Egypt, it will be in a position to resist any call to return the West Bank to Arab rule.

It should have been clear ever since the first Israeli settlements were established on the West Bank and the Golan Heights in 1967 that Israel intended to keep these territories in any future peace settlement.

Forty-two such settlements were established in all parts of the occupied territories between 1967 and 1973 — and this figure does not take into account the large housing developments (to which, of course, only Jewish residents were admitted) with which the Israeli government sought to encircle the Arab sector of Jerusalem. The October War of 1973, which administered a severe shock to the confidence of the Israelis, might have been expected to slow down the process of colonization in the occupied territories. In practice it had the opposite effect and the Israelis, aware that soon they might have to come to terms with the Arabs, hastened their settlement program so as to get as much Arab land into Israeli hands before negotiations should start. And the process was accelerated yet again after the Begin government came to power in the elections of 1977, so that now there are more than 100 settlements.

During all this time it is remarkable — and regrettable—that the Arab governments have done so little to press for international action to restrain Israel's colonization program. For here was one aspect of the Arab-Israeli problem where the issue was clear-cut and international opinion was firmly on the side of the Arabs. Yet it is only in the last three or four years that the question of the settlements has received much public attention, and then not as a result of Arab political pressure but because Western journalists began to concentrate on it and to point out its far-reaching consequences.

The whole question of the Israeli settlements had before that time been the subject of so little political activity that when the British Foreign Secretary (the same James Callaghan who today is prime minister) was asked in the House of Commons in August 1975 whether the settlement did not represent an obstacle to the search for peace, he was able to reply: "I have no particular knowledge of settlements."

Since then, of course, the situation has changed. The Israeli settlements have been discussed at the United Nations and they have repeatedly been denounced by President Carter (and even by Callaghan, who is now much better informed about them) — and that is all to the good. But they are still there, on Arab land, in all the territories occupied in 1967. And although the Israelis have undertaken to give up the settlements in Sinai as part of the peace agreement with Israel, hardly a week goes by without the announcement of fresh plans for the establishment of more settlements on the West Bank. Can anything be done to stop a process which, if it continues, will rule out the possibility of any "comprehensive, just and lasting peace in the Middle East"?

The Security Council's resolution of March 22 suggests a way forward. After condemning Israel's settlement policy, it establishes a special commission, consisting of three members of the Security Council itself, which is to examine the whole question and report to the Security Council by July 1, when the Council will reconvene "to review the situation in the light of the findings of the Commission."

That Security Council meeting in July could be as futile and unproductive as many earlier meetings — or it could produce some result. It depends on the Arabs. If they can impose sanctions on Egypt for going the wrong way about achieving a comprehensive peace in the Middle East, what is there to them proposing sanctions against Israel for blocking the way to such a peace? The United States, the Soviet Union and the members of the European Community have all publicly stated that the Israeli settlements constitute an obstacle to peace. Which of them would resist a proposal that, if Israel persists in building more settlements in the face of the Security Council's recent resolution, the United Nations will impose sanctions against Israel?

Almost certainly the United States would be unwilling to support such a resolution. But if the resolution is carefully and sensibly worded, if it deals strictly with this issue and does not try to deal with the other and more complex issues involved in a comprehensive Arab-Israeli settlement, then to oppose it would put the American president in a ridiculous position, in view of the statements which he personally has made about the illegal and dangerous nature of Israel's settlement policy. The Arabs have left it very late to take effective action in the matter of the settlements on the West Bank, but "its never too late to mend."

saudi press review

"The parties to the Camp David agreements are now saying that the Arabs rejected the accords for fear of retaliation by radical elements, in the Arab world. This was first said by Begin, then by the Egyptian press and other official sources and finally by President Carter himself," according to "Al-Madina."

"Such allegations coming from

"Such allegations coming from the Israeli enemy may be understandable, but not when they come from an Arab president like Sadat. It is strange though to hear Carter echo the same allegations. But of course the whole idea of restricting the rejection of the peace treaty to the extremists in the Arab world is to defame the Arab struggle for the restorations of their occupied land and Palestinian rights.

"On the contrary, one can say that it is the radicals in the Arab world who must be held accountable for deepening instability and disrupting the general situation by their blind dependence on the Soviet Union. Hence we believe that Carter's definition of rejection as a result of radicalism in Arab ranks is not only lamentable but unacceptable. Nor can we agree with him that President Sadat had worked for the Palestinian question more strenuously than any other Arab leader.

"This, in our view, is an overstatement that none in the Arab or Muslim world will corroborate. Carter may be excused because he is unaware of the contribution of other Arabs to their main issue. It is even ironic that Sadat should be credited with serving the Palestinian cause when the Palestinians themselves consider his recent actions as more harmful to their cause than anything anybody else had done."

" Al-Madina " said it expected Carter to take positive action in recognizing the rights of the Palestinians," or to take a short cut towards recognizing the PLO."

"But he persists in ignoring them while he claims to he sincerely interested in finding a comprehensive solution for the Middle East question of which the Palestinian issue is the most central." Commenting on the possibility of an Israeli attack on southern Lebanon, "Al-Riyadh" said the Lebanese problem "started as a conflict between Lebanese and Palestinians, then between Christians and Muslims but has gradually lost its meaning and nnw boils down to an Israeli threat to invade the country or partition it.

"It is heing assisted by a traitor, called Saad Haddad, the renegade Lebanese officer who collaborates with Israel in the southern region.

"The Israeli plan calls for

"The Israeli plan calls for changes in the Arab map so that it may extort whatever it needs to consolidate its existence at the expense of the Arabs.

"This morbid relationship does not exist between Israel and Haddad alone," the paper said.

"There are other elements which deal with international political centers with a view to imposing the projected Israeli map by inciting certain minorities to subvert the peace and break the domination of the majority in the Arab states."

"The architects of the peace treaty banked on winning over the inhabitants of the occupied lands by their so-called self-government for the Palestinians," said "Al-Jazirah."

"But they made a mistake because they failed to take into consideration the strong bonds between the Palestinians inside and outside the occupied teritories. They also failed to take into account the profound feelings of unity among the Palestinians towards their supreme cause."

In a commentary on the war between Uganda and Tanzania, "Al-Nadwa" said that Tanzania's action in invading Uganda "is calculated to serve the interests of imperialism and zionism."

"It is unfortunate," it said,
"that the invasion takes place at the time the conference of confrontation states opposed to the racist regime in Rhodesia is taking

"Jordanian-Palestinian relations seem to be progressing well, as proved by their agreement to help the Palestinians in the occupied territories fight the selfgovernment scheme incorporated in the peace treaty," "Al Rilad" said.

"The two sides are best suited to help the people in the occupied lands because of the special relations that bind therm. Their aim should be to prevent the Israelis from consecrating their domination of the Arab lands through such suspicious plans as self-rule which was recently described by an Israeli official as the key to permanent control."

WASHINGTON — As a child, photo journalist Lee Patterson always wondered where Oman ended and Muscat began as she looked at that region in her familv's atlas

Following up her childhood interests, Patterson has journeyed twice to Oman, taking pictures of the land and its people. These she has put together in an exhibt, "Beautiful People of Oman," on display at the Middle East Institute here until April 13.

"People are more important than landscapes," Patterson said, explaining why she didn't focus her camera on scenes that show the extensive development taking place in Oman.

Patterson's photos show the Omanis in candid moments - at the cafe, carrying water, in the bazaar, tying turbans.

At the time of her first visit to Oman in 1973, Patterson found no hotels, so she stayed with Reformed Church missionaries who ran the Al-Sada Hospital, which has since been absorbed by the health ministry.

Patterson thinks the Omanis are "beautiful people and handsome men" and thus the title of her

The accessibility of the Green Mountain today as opposed to five years ago illustrates the extensive and rapid changes being made in Oman.

In October 1978, when Patterson most recently visited, she found one or two flights to the plateau six days a week, a government road-building project and a supermarket at the airport.

The daily flights mean that fresh fish from Abu Dhabi are available to the people on the mountain, This in turn means more protein in the villagers' diets and healthier

Some of the traditional Omani ways are changing under modernization. Patterson found the homes now have more chairs, acrylic blankets, more paint, and the people take pictures of each

Though Patterson said she had no difficulty in taking photos of the Omani on her first visit, she found on her second trip that they were much more accustomed to picture-taking. The reason was that many of the men returned from their army duty with newlypurchased cameras.

A false start delayed the race 20 minutes and when it restarted Carlos Reutemann of Argentina joined Laffite behind the pack.

Reutemann had an electrical failure on his Lotus during his warm-up lap and had to use the hack-up car.

Laffite broke his gearbox and also had to use his reserve car. It cost the drivers their second and fifth places on the grid.

The Washington Democrat, interviewed on NBC television's "Meet the Press," said he esti-mated that about half the increase would result from price rises by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Last week, Carter announced be would gradually lift prices on domestic crude oil so they would rise to world prices, and ask Congress for a windfall profits tax on oil companies. Energy Secretary James Schelesinger, interviews on the ABC television network program "Issues and Answers," said Sunday that Jackson higher estimate was likely. But the effect of decontrol this year should be minimal, he predicted.

Jackson, in arguing against decontrolling the price of domestic oil, said the resulting rises would be " extremely adverse on our economy at a time when we are fighting inflation."

Instead of lifting controls, he urged that the period for mandatory price controls, which expires in June, be extended two more other items, a panel of economic experts said Monday.

The five experts, who oversee the nation's economy for the government, urged Chancellor Helmnt Schmidt's administration to avoid using "excessively restric-tive" policies to counter inflation.

Although the predicted rate of inflation is far below that of the United States, Britain and other Western nations, it is substantially above the two to three per cent level enjoyed by West Germany during the past two years.

Panel members cited the increase in the value added tax as another factor in the price But the panel also predicted that the number of unemployed would sink by about 100,000 to 900,000 by the end of the year.

The experts projected an average 1979 rise in West German consumer prices of 3.5 per cent, up from 2.6 per cent in 1978. The government has stuck to its projection of a 3 per cent price rise this year, although there are strong indications inflation is gaining momentum Bonn officials have privately

Algerian gas plan gets support

LUXEMBOURG, April 9(R) — A plan to bring Algerian natural gas to Europe by underwater pipeline is to be backed by the European Investment Bank, the Common Market's long-term financial arm, it was announced Monday. The bank said it would lend the Italian government agency ENI $ 47.45 million for the project.

The pipeline will also link Sicily with the Italian mainland, eventually running as far oorth as Bologna. It said the pipeline would help boost and diversify Common Market energy supplies. It has an agreement with the Algerian state energy authority Scoatrach to lielp offset the shortfall in Italy's natural gas supply which has not met domestic demand since 1971.

ists had been executed. The Ugandan statement issued in Kampala said: " Four foreign merceoaries, uniformed and armed, have been shot dead after coming into Uganda in a boat over Lake Victoria.

Meanwhile, troops loyal to Amin were reported fighting back with new strength Monday against invading Tanzanians and Uganda rebels in the southern suburbs of Kampala.

Earlier Monday, the London "Daily Express" reported that four journalists - two Swedes and two West Germans --- were capAmin's secret police and shot to death as they tried to sneak into

Other sources said the four had hired a boat and were attempting to eoter the country by crossing Lake Victoria which lies oo Uganda's eastern border.

The "Daily Express," quoting an unnamed United Nations source in Nairobi, Keoya, said the missing Germans were Hans Bollinger, a photographer for the French photo agency Gamma, and Wolfgang Stiens, a correspondent for " Stern " magazine."

Spokesmen for the Swedish oewspapers "Expressen" and "Svenska Dagblatt" said the and Sunday, the informants said. oames of their missing correspondents were Arne Lemberg and fered their heaviest casualties of Karl Bergman, respectively.

The exiles said while the battle on the Eutebbe road was being waged, Tanzanian invaders captured Fort Portal, a provincial administrative ceoter 200 miles west of Kampala.

Sources in Kampala said Amin himself was almost definitely still in Uganda. He was spotted Sunday driving his rally car through the capital and was believed based at a new command post east of Kampala residents reported some isolated shooting and explosions during the night, but otherwise no new developments in the largely deserted and increasingly foodless capital.

Jewish settlers end protest on West Bank

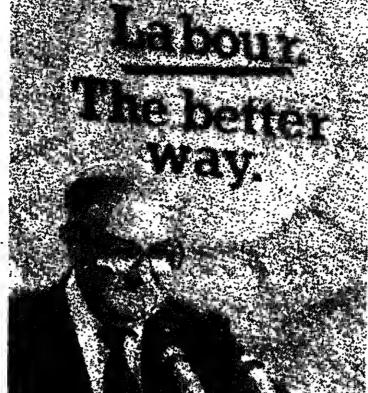

TEL AVIV, April 9 (AP) — Jewish settlers from Kiryat Arba near Hebron in the Israelioccupied West Bank Mooday vacated a hilltop they took over Sunday night.

A spokesman for the group, Ephraim Levinger, said about 30 settlers took over the hilltop " to protest over promises that were not kept. Next time we'll build a real settlement."

Levinger claimed the hilltop was surveyed by the Defense Ministry six years ago for the purpose of adding housing units for Kiryat Arba settlers. The hilltop is about one kilometer from the set-

But Levinger claimed nothing had been door since the survey, and said that Palestinians from nearby Hebron had built several buildings on the site and were living in them. Despite an army barricade on the road leading to the hilltop, the settlers managed to smuggle building materials to the site and erected a concrete block structure.

Philippines rebels reportedly kill 14

MANILA, April 9 (AP) — Muslim insurgeots in the southern Philippines killed 14 people, including four government soldiers, in two separate attacks, the Defense Ministry claimed Mon-

A family of six was killed in a dawn raid last Wednesday in Sultan Kudarat province in southcentral Mindanao, Brig. Gen. Delfin Castro, commander of the military's Central Command in the south, said. He said' the rebels raked the family's house with automatic fire.

Castro told Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile the attackers were members of the Moro been fighting for independence since President Ferdinand Marcos imposed martial law in September 1972. Details of the Sultan Kudarat attack were not made available.

In Lanao del Sur Province, about 100 kilometers north of Sultan Kudarat, liberation front fighters ambushed: a truck of the National Power Corp. and killed four passengers and four Philippine constabulary: escorts, the defeose ministry said.

The military said the government engineers and their guards were en route to a power project in Bombang Town when the rebels opened fire.Castro's report did not say how many persons were aboard the truck.

Last November, rebels killed 11 Constabulary soldiers and six civilians riding a truck to a government power project just out-side Marawi City, 896 kilometers southeast of Manila and in the same province as the latest attack. The November attack was the secood in a mouth against the Lanao power project. Earlier, rebels said to be MNLF members killed 13 NPC personnel and blew up several transmission lines.

Work on the $ 70.6 million electrification project began in 1974 and was suspended for a month after the first attack. The ministry has said the project, which involves the installation of 483 kilometers of main transmission lines across Mindanao.

WASHINGTON April 9 (AP) - A decision is expected from the South African cabinet Tuesday which officials here say could bave an impact oo black-white relatioos throughout southern Africa and on U.S.-Soviet relations as well.

The issue is whether South Africa will accept a revised U.N. plan to convert the territory of South-West Africa into the indepeodeot country of Namibiathrough elections supervised by the international organization.

Senior American officials, asking not to be quoted by name, said the stakes involved go far beyond the fate of the mostly black inhabitants of the mineral-rich territory Sooth Africa has administered for the last 60 years.

The plan's success, the officials said, could improve the climate for a peaceful resolution of another African colonial issue, Rhodesia.

Failure of the plan, however, would almost certainly lead to expanded Soviet-Cuban aid for
